VISUAL, PERFORMING, AND MEDIA ARTS AWARDS

The Interdisciplinary Humanities Center offers annual awards (up to $1,500) to support innovative creative projects in the visual, performing, and media arts that engage with issues of interdisciplinary concern. The competition is open to UCSB faculty and graduate students. Both individual and collaborative projects are eligible. In addition to making a significant contribution to current scholarship and research practices, proposed projects should seek to frame their questions, methods, and modes of inquiry with reference to two or more established disciplines/fields of study; and/or foster the development of new objects, areas of study, and ways of producing, presenting, and disseminating knowledge. The winning project will be designated an IHC activity and accorded full administrative support.

GRADUATE COLLABORATIVE AWARDS

The Interdisciplinary Humanities Center offers annual collaborative project awards (up to $1,500) to encourage graduate student collaboration beyond the confines of particular departments and disciplines, both within the arts and humanities and between the arts and humanities, social sciences, and sciences. Groups of graduate students from at least two UCSB departments and academic programs are eligible to apply. A faculty advisor is recommended but not required. Eligible projects include conferences, symposia, exhibitions, and performances. Projects that experiment with a combination of dissemination formats are encouraged. In addition to making a significant contribution to current scholarship and research practices, proposed projects should seek to frame their questions, methods, and modes of inquiry with reference to two or more established disciplines/fields of study; and/or foster the development of new objects, areas of study, and ways of producing, presenting, and disseminating knowledge. The winning project will be designated an IHC activity and accorded full administrative support. Priority will be given to providing seed funding for new initiatives.
